

David was born and bred in Houston, Texas. He moved to Los Angeles to attend UCLA. After graduating with a Bachelor of Arts, he studied abroad for a year and then returned to California to begin his technology career. David worked in technical publications for many years, helping customers maximize value while serving business goals such as increasing customer satisfaction and retention, and decreasing support and localization costs. He transitioned to product management when he joined the team at Symantec responsible for developing content management system features and SaaS apps for content localization and delivery workflows.

David's superpower is listening closely to customers (via direct contact or data) and deciphering what they really need in order to succeed.

You should hire David because he has the experience, desire to learn, and emotional intelligence that will allow to succeed in the role.

When not working, David enjoys listening to podcasts on sports, entertainment, current events, and religion; cooking; reading; watching TV with his wife; and walking his dog. He lives in Los Angeles.

David has over five years of experience in product management.

David is a United States citizen and is legally allowed to work in any state in the U.S.

David does not require sponsorship to work in the US nor will he require it in the future.